The Job Guide: Volume 3

Foreword

The Massachusetts Division of Employment Security has supported and encouraged the development of these Job Guides as a practical tool essential to the work of career guidance and vocational counselors and job development and placement professionals throughout the Commonwealth. The Guides represent our continued commitment to improving our labor market information system by providing usable products and by fostering pragmatic and informed use of labor market data through our publications and training programs.

We have long recognized that counselors and placement professionals, as well as others who help students and adults define their career goals and secure jobs, are in need of more than just statistical data on industry and occupational employment trends if they are to perform their jobs well. They must also be able to relate the above types of information to more specific knowledge of economic establishments in Massachusetts and the occupational and industrial structure within which they operate. To provide employment and training professionals with this essential information, complementing the many other data series developed by our agency, we undertook the task of updating and reissuing the Guides.

The Job Guides have been published in a set of three volumes. Volumes I and II provide name and address listings for economic establishments employing 20 or more individuals within each Service Delivery Area (SDA) in Eastern Massachusetts (Volume I) and Central and Western Massachusetts (Volume II). The listings for the smaller Berkshire and Franklin/Hampshire SDAs in Volume II include establishments which employ 10 or more individuals. Employers are listed by industry. They are further grouped by size-class (in descending order according to size-class range) within each three-digit Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) industry.

Volume III consists of two sections. The first section contains a User's Guide that describes in detail several ways in which the Guides can be used in the development of an overall strategy to guide career counseling and job development and placement efforts. The process outlined in the Guides is also useful for directing individual job search, for planning education and training programs, and for designing marketing strategies for employer services activities.

Volume III also presents an Industry/Occupation Matrix for Massachusetts. Part A of the Matrix presents staffing pattern data for Massachusetts industries, by providing information on the level and percent distribution of occupations within these industries. Occupations composed of at least 50 individuals or representing 0.5 percent of total industry employment on a statewide basis are included.

Part B of the Matrix presents data on the industrial distribution of workers employed in key occupations in the state. The listing includes all industries that employ at least 50 individuals statewide in a given occupation as well as those industries that employ at least 0.5 percent of the total individuals in an occupation.

The Guides represent one part of a more comprehensive effort being made by the Division to increase awareness of labor market information and promote its effective use. In addition to republishing the Guides, the Division, in cooperation with the Massachusetts Occupational Information Coordinating Committee (MOICC), will continue to sponsor training in the use of labor market and occupational information for counseling and job development and placement. The Guides are an important element in making effective use of labor market data, because they provide a critical link between the employment numbers and the real world of employers and jobs. It is important that all of us throughout the education and employment and training system, who are engaged in helping individuals to find satisfying jobs and achieve successful careers, have at our disposal the most complete and comprehensive information available. One of our goals at the Division of Employment Security is to ensure that we do have that information.

Acknowledgments

Successful completion of the task of producing the Job Guides required the efforts and abilities of a number of individuals at the Center for Labor Market Studies and the Division of Employment Security (DES). Kristin Demong, Marlene Seltzer, and Robert Vinson of the DES provided continuous personal and financial support for this project. Their support, together with the day-to-day guidance and camaraderie of Mr. Vinson, enabled us to produce this set of documents designed to meet the needs of counselors and job placement professionals.

A key element in the success of a project such as this is the quality of staff assigned to complete it. Marilyn Boyle of the Massachusetts Occupational Information Coordinating Committee, together with Paul Harrington and Andrew Sum of the Center for Labor Market Studies, organized the project and directed its operation on a day-to-day basis. Elliot Winer, Mary Ellen Steller, Martha Dailey, Paul Capodanno and Nancy Klayman of the Industry/Occupation Research Unit of the DES provided critical support in making available data bases on staffing patterns and establishment listings.

Lebarron Briggs IV and William Goedicke of the Center for Labor Market Studies provided high quality computer support to this project. Tom McDonald, Bill Ryan and Gary Lariviere provided computer processing assistance at DES. Linda Harrington provided editorial support for the publication of the Volumes. Even a casual inspection of the Guides would reveal that many tedious hours of checking and cross-checking address listings and industry-occupation matrix findings were required. Fortunately, we had access to an extraordinarily bright, hardworking, and cheerful group of research assistants who energetically undertook this task. Special thanks must go to Francine Clark, Mary J. Cote, Linda Gorton, Julie Joyce, Kim Kevorkian, Anna Magliocco, Mary McCallion, Cheryl Milanette, Heidi Nelson, Nancy Radicchi, and Susan Wollins of the Center for Labor Market Studies and Frank Bellino, Jeanne Goggin, and Janet McCarthy of DES. Without the enthusiastic hard work of these young persons, these Guides would not have been completed.

Finally, Keith Hoffman and Sheila Palma of the Center for Labor Market Studies deserve high praise for their patience in typing and editing these Guides. As always, Ms. Palma's dedication and enthusiasm enabled the project to be successfully completed.

Making Effective Use of the Job Guides

Andrew M. Sum & Paul E. Harrington

Introduction

The planning, design, and operation of human resource programs at the local level depend on timely and reliable information on local labor market developments and trends. Knowledge of the industrial structure of local employment, recent trends in employment by industry, the names and locations of establishments in each local industry, the occupational staffing patterns of local industries, and current job openings by occupation and industry is particularly indispensable for job development and placement activities. The effectiveness of these job placement and development activities is often critical to the immediate and long-term success of employment and training programs.

Recognizing the critical importance of industry and occupational employment data for the planning and operation of job development and placement activities, the Massachusetts Occupational Information Coordinating Committee (MOICC) and the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security have produced a series of Job Guides for use by human resource agency staff throughout the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Technical assistance in the planning and coordination of the activities needed to produce these resource materials was provided by professional staff within the Center for Labor Market Studies of Northeastern University.

The information in these Job Guides can be used to plan, design, and administer a diverse number of human resource program activities. The planning of job placement activities for graduates of classroom training programs, the design of strategies for marketing customized training and on-the-job training (OJT) with private sector employers, and the development of job search strategies for dislocated workers and re-entrants to the labor force can be facilitated with the information provided in these job development resource guides. These resource guides are particularly relevant to career guidance, employment counseling, job development, and OJT marketing staff in such human resource agencies as the Massachusetts Employment Service, local Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA) service delivery areas, vocational education agencies, and vocational rehabilitation agencies.

We will begin with a description of the contents of the Job Guides, including the data sources used to produce them. Then we will provide a brief review of alternative uses of these Guides by professional staff in employment and training agencies throughout the Commonwealth. Finally, we will outline specific steps to be followed in using the information in these Guides and discuss procedures for supplementing this information with other information sources on industry employment levels, hiring practices and policies, and wage/working conditions data. We will illustrate their specific applications to the planning and design of a series of job search, job placement, and OJT marketing activities. Actual data and information from these guides will be used together with hypothetical data on local firms, their employment levels, and hiring policies in illustrating such practical uses of the guides.

The Contents of the Job Guides

The Job Guides are published in three separate volumes. The first two volumes of this set will contain name and address listings of Massachusetts employers hiring a minimum number of 20 workers during 1984. The first of these volumes covers geographic areas within eastern Massachusetts while the second volume covers employers in the western part of the state. Each of these employer directories is organized in the following manner. First, to facilitate use, employers are classified by JTPA Service Delivery Area (SDA). Each economic establishment will appear in the SDA in which it is geographically located. Job development activities of a local human resource agency may well cover more than one SDA area. This will pose no particular problem since the names and addresses of establishments in all neighboring SDAs will appear in either Volume 1 or Volume 2.

Second, economic establishments within each SDA are classified by three-digit Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) codes. SIC codes are assigned to each of these establishments by staff within the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security. The assignment of a specific three-digit SIC code to an establishment is based on the particular good or service produced by the establishment that accounts for the largest share of its sales revenue. Establishments producing similar products or providing similar services are classified in the same three-digit SIC industry. The Massachusetts Division of Employment Security tracks employment growth in these three-digit SIC industries on a quarterly basis through a data collection survey known as the ES-202 system, which includes wage and salary employment in all establishments covered by the federal and state unemployment insurance laws. More than 98 percent of all wage and salary employment in Massachusetts is currently covered by existing unemployment insurance laws.

Third, within each three-digit SIC industry, economic establishments are categorized by their employment size-class in descending order from the largest size class to the smallest. The employment size-class designations appearing in the employer directories are the following:

Employment Size Class

500-999
250-499
100-249
50-99
20-49

It should be noted that the exact employment level of an establishment is not identified. Instead, each establishment is classified into an employment size-class based on its 1984 employment level. For most SDAs, only those economic establishments employing 20 or more workers during 1984 are identified in the directories. For a few of the smaller SDAs, all economic establishments employing 10 or more workers are identified. The employment levels of establishments are based upon a series of reports (ES-202 Employment Wage Reports) submitted by employers to the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security. All of the size-class designations in the employer directories are based upon employer-provided data.

The third volume of the Job Guides provides information on the occupational staffing patterns of Massachusetts industries; it also identifies industries in which individual occupations tend to be concentrated. The third volume is divided into two major sections. The first section provides fairly detailed information on the occupational staffing patterns of more than 200 three-digit SIC industries in Massachusetts. For each of these industries, occupations are listed in descending order, based on the share of total statewide employment in that industry. Thus, those occupations that are found most frequently in a given industry are listed first. The Occupational Employment Statistics (OES) titles of each of these dominant occupations appear in the table for each three-digit SIC industry, together with data on the absolute number of workers employed in these occupations in each industry and their share of total statewide employment in the industry.

All of the occupational staffing pattern data appearing in Volume III are derived from the Occupational Employment Statistics (OES) program in Massachusetts. The OES program is a statistical survey of employers operated by the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security in cooperation with the Bureau of Labor Statistics. All of the data on the occupational staffing patterns of Massachusetts industries were provided by private and public sector employers. The OES employer-based data on occupational staffing patterns generally are believed to be more reliable than those derived from household surveys such as the decennial Census or Current Population Survey.

The second section of Volume III provides information on the distribution of employment by industry in Massachusetts for more than 200 of the largest occupations. Information is provided on the three-digit SIC industries that dominate the employment of workers in each of these occupations. Industries are listed in descending order on the basis of the absolute number of workers that they employ in the occupation being examined. Data are provided on the estimated total number of workers employed statewide in the occupation, the number employed in each dominant industry, and the proportion of total statewide employment in the occupation accounted for by each industry. These data are also derived from the OES survey described above and are thus based on employers' reports of their occupational employment staffing patterns.

Alternative Uses of the Job Guides

As noted in the Introduction, the information in the Job Guides can be used by local human resource agency staff in carrying out a wide variety of job development, job placement, and marketing activities. Among the many uses of these Guides are the following:

- (i) Assist in the planning of job development activities aimed at obtaining training-related placements for graduates of a recently-completed classroom training program in a specific occupational area;
- (ii) Facilitate the design of a strategy aimed at marketing customized training for local firms in selected growth industries;
- (iii) Help to obtain OJT slots for a group of JTPA Title II program participants interested in securing employment in well-defined, entry-level occupations;
- (iv) Assist a Massachusetts Division of Employment Security employment counselor in finding related employment for a discharged veteran who was trained in the electronics field while serving in the armed forces;
- (v) Assist dislocated workers in their job search efforts aimed at securing employment in a specific set of occupations for which they possess necessary qualifications;
- (vi) Assist professional job development staff in school-to-work transition programs to develop entry-level jobs for graduates of their programs;
- (vii) Help women re-entering the labor force to identify employment opportunities in occupational areas in which they wish to become re-employed.

All of the above activities are aimed at securing employment in specific types of occupational areas for a diverse group of jobseekers, ranging from teenaged new entrants into the labor force to older workers with substantial prior experience who have been dislocated from their previous jobs. Knowledge of the local industries and the individual firms providing the bulk of job opportunities in the occupations for which employment is being sought would be highly useful for all of the above job development, job placement, and job search activities. The Job Guides contain precisely such information and, if properly used and supplemented with other types of information, can be quite valuable in the attaining of the goals of local human resource programs.

Uses of the Job Guides: Assisting the Re-employment of Dislocated Workers

During the early years of the 1980's, increased attention has been paid to the employment problems of dislocated workers. These workers include individuals who have lost their jobs due to such reasons as plant closings, plant relocations, a permanent reduction in force, or the elimination of a particular set of jobs made obsolete by technical change. To assist such workers in obtaining re-employment, the Congress has passed legislation providing monies to finance job search training, re-training, and placement assistance programs for such workers. The bulk of such monies is made available to state and local JTPA service delivery areas under Title III of the Job Training Partnership Act of 1982.

For example, a local metal fabrication firm supplying parts to a shipyard largely engaged in defense contract work has recently been forced to lay off a group of 10 welders due to the loss in subcontracting work with the shipyard. These 10 welders meet eligibility criteria for participation in Title III JTPA programs and have applied for assistance in becoming re-employed in jobs related to the welding field. The job developers employed by the Title III program have checked the job orders appearing on the Job Bank of the Massachusetts Division of Employment Security and have reviewed want-ad sections of the local newspapers, but have not been successful in locating welder-related job openings in the local area that are suitable for these dislocated welders. Recognizing that many existing welder positions are filled informally through referrals by existing employees of the company and direct applications to the firm, the job developers wish to obtain information on the actual hiring situations in other local firms that are major employers of workers in welding-related occupations. Obtaining knowledge of the so-called "hidden labor market" for welders can be facilitated through effective use of the Job Guides. Let us begin by examining Volume III of the Job Guides to identify the industries in Massachusetts that dominate the employment of welders.

The title of the OES occupation that covers the employment of welders is "Welders and Flame Cutters." Information on the industries that are dominant employers of welders in Massachusetts is presented in the second half of Volume III. Table 1 on the following page provides information on those industries classified at the three-digit SIC level that are the major employers of welders and flame cutters in Massachusetts. Total employment of welders and flame cutters in Massachusetts during 1984 was estimated at 7,169. These workers, however, are not distributed uniformly across all industries in Massachusetts. In fact, as an analysis of Table 1 reveals, there are eight different three-digit SIC industries in Massachusetts that account for three or more percent of the total number of welders in the state. These first eight industries combined employ approximately 45 percent of all welders and flame cutters in Massachusetts. The 21 industries appearing in this table account for 71 percent of all welders in the state. Thus, job development efforts to assist dislocated welders in regaining employment in related occupations should focus on hiring activities in these dominant industries. It should be noted that the industrial structure of local economies can be expected to differ in substantive ways from the structure of the state economy. As a result, the dominant employing industries for welders may vary somewhat from one local economy to another. Detailed personal knowledge of the local industrial structure is a critical first step in the design of local job development marketing strategies.

Once the local dominant industries for welders have been identified, the job development staff should review recent local employment trends in these industries. These dominant industries are often characterized by quite varying rates of job growth in recent years, since they serve different product markets and experience different degrees of foreign and domestic competition. Data from the Current Employment Statistics program and the ES-202 program can be used to identify recent employment trends in dominant industries in the local economy. Employment data for four of the industries that are dominant employers of welders are presented in Table 2. The data are derived from the ES-202 system and provide information on the level of employment in each dominant local industry during the second quarters of calendar years 1983 and 1985.

373	Ship, Boat Building and Repair	800	500	-300	-37.5
371	Motor Vehicles and Equipment	350	375	+25	+7.3

The four industries that are known to be dominant employers of workers in welding-related occupations are SIC 344, Fabricated Structural Metal Products; SIC 179, Miscellaneous Special Trade Contractors; SIC 373, Ship and Boat Building and Repair; and SIC 371, Motor Vehicles and Equipment. A close examination of Table 2 reveals that these four local industries were characterized by sharply divergent employment growth patterns between the second quarter of 1983 and the second quarter of 1985. SIC 179, Miscellaneous Special Trade Contractors, experienced the highest absolute and relative rate of growth in employment during the most recent two-year period. Total employment in this local industry expanded by 70 persons or 14.3 percent, an extraordinarily rapid rate of growth for a two-year period. Two other local industries known to be major statewide employers of welders (SIC 344 and SIC 371) also substantially increased the number of workers on their payrolls over the past two years. At the same time, the ship and boat building industry, a key source of employment for welders, reduced its employment level by nearly 38 percent over the past two years. The decline in defense-related contract work at the shipyard led to a reduction in the demand for output by the metal fabrication firm that has recently laid off ten of its welders.

Given the findings on recent employment trends within dominant local industries in Table 2, a job developer assisting our dislocated welders in securing related employment will not attempt to contact employers in the local shipbuilding industry to determine available employment opportunities for welders. Design of a sound marketing strategy should begin by identifying those dominant industries of welders characterized by favorable growth in employment. Let us call this set of local industries the "targetted industries," which will serve as the central focus of our job development and placement efforts. Remember the "targetted industries" are that subset of the dominant industries characterized by favorable recent employment trends. Table 2 reveals that three of the dominant industries for welders would also be classified as targetted industries. Let us begin our examination of the local establishments that belong to these targetted industries with SIC 344, the fabricated structural metal products industry.

Once we have identified a local targetted industry for our job development efforts, we need information on the names and locations of the firms comprising this industry in our local economy. If our job development activities are concentrated in an SDA located in Eastern Massachusetts, we simply need to refer to Volume 1 of the Job Guides. Once we have located the section of Volume 1 containing information on firms in our SDA, we simply look up SIC 344 and identify the names and addresses of economic establishments in our local SDA that are classified under this industry. An example of the types of information appearing in Volumes 1 and 2 of the Job Guides is presented in Table 3 on the following page.

Three local employers in SIC 344 are Valco Instruments, Flexible Machine, and Rallston Metal Products. Volumes I and II of the Guides list all local establishments in SIC 344 employing 20 or more workers during 1984. The names, addresses, and employment-size classes of these establishments are listed under SIC 344, starting with the largest employers. All of the additional information in this table must be obtained by the job developer through personal contacts with these firms. The names and telephone numbers of the person(s) in these firms responsible for or familiar with the hiring of workers are not provided in the Guides. There are resource materials available, including a volume produced by the California Employment Development Department, that allow an individual to identify the sections of the yellow page listings of telephone directories that correspond to a given three-digit SIC industry. For example, the headings in the yellow page listings corresponding to SIC 344 include Cooling Towers, Cryogenic Equipment and Supplies, Doors, Door Frames, Expansion Joints, and Steel Fabricators. Telephone numbers of local employers in this industry can then be obtained. The use of the yellow page listings is particularly helpful when a given three-digit SIC industry contains a heterogeneous mix of firms, only a limited number of which are likely to employ workers in the occupations for which jobs are being sought. We will illustrate this in greater detail later.

Personal visits with local firms in the targetted industries are typically needed to acquire the information appearing in the second part of Table 3. Interviews with personnel directors, managers, or supervisors can yield information on the specific number of workers employed in the occupations for which we are attempting to develop jobs, recent employment growth or decline in the firm, the current job openings situation for welders, the short-term outlook for the hiring of welders, and practices toward hiring and training welders on the job. The above types of information are not only useful for current job development activities, but for reference in guiding our future job development activities.

Not all local firms in a given targetted industry will be equally viable candidates for job placement. Some firms may be members of a local growth industry but may not be experiencing any employment growth. For example, in Table 3, we can see that Flexible Machine, a firm employing 14 welders, has had a stable employment level during the past year and has not experienced much labor turnover. John Cronin, the assistant personnel director, has informed us that the firm hires experienced welders. It is a labor supply source compatible with the recently laidoff welders; however, there are no current openings in welding that they could fill. Both Valco Instruments and Rallston Metal Products recently have been engaged in hiring welders as a result of growth and turnover. Both of these economic establishments are viable candidates for the placement of the dislocated welders. Discussions with the personnel managers and supervisors in these firms should be initiated to arrange appropriate referrals of applicants. Documentation of all job development contacts, job interviews, and their results should be maintained by the job development staff, both to provide a record of placement-related activities and to update establishment profiles for use in future job development and placement efforts.

Once local firms in SIC 344 have been identified and contacted as part of the job development process, the next targetted industry should be reviewed. Table 2 reveals that SIC 179, Special Trade Contractors, also meets the targetted industry criteria; i.e., it is a dominant employer of welders throughout the state and has been experiencing favorable employment growth in the local economy in recent years. To identify the local firms comprising this industry, we simply find the SIC 179 listing for our SDA in Volume 1 of the Guides and review the names, address listings, and employment-size classes of establishments under this SIC category. An example of the types of establishments that may be found in this three-digit SIC industry is presented in Table 4.

The industry being examined (SIC 179) is composed of a quite heterogeneous set of firms. These companies may engage in such diverse activities as home and commercial insulation, air conditioning, elevator construction, steel erection, and roofing. The OES survey data revealed that there were 560 welders and flame cutters employed statewide in this industry and that workers in these welding-related occupations accounted for 5.8 percent of total employment in the industry. This occupational staffing ratio of approximately six welders per 100 workers can be expected to vary widely among firms in this particular construction industry, given the heterogeneous nature of their products and the production technologies that they employ. Use of the resource volume converting SIC titles to yellow page listings would likely be quite helpful in selecting those specialty trade contractors most likely to employ welders, such as structural steel contractors, commercial and industrial generators; and power plant equipment, tank repairing, and heating and ventilation contractors.

In Table 4, we find that the largest local employer in industry SIC 179 is Northeast Insulation. Our contacts with Floyd Roberts reveal that the firm has no welders on its payroll. The company is expecting to increase the number of its employees over the next six months and is willing to consider an OJT contract to fill a slot for an insulation material installer. Several of the dislocated welders may be willing to change occupations and possess the interest, aptitudes, and abilities to perform well in this trade. Knowledge of such openings and their hiring conditions can be of assistance in re-employing the dislocated welders. Two other local firms in SIC 179, R & J Steel Erection and McVino Construction Company, do employ several welders; however, our contacts with the foremen and owners of these two local firms reveal that only one of them is currently a viable candidate for the placement of our dislocated welders. R & J Steel Erection has been growing at a rapid rate over the past year due to local construction of several office complexes requiring structural steel. Roland Griffin, the foreman, has informed us that the firm often seeks to fill available openings with experienced workers and has been successful in hiring and retaining welders previously employed by metal fabricating firms and the local shipyard. Referrals of appropriate job candidates may well lead to success in re-employing several of our dislocated workers. Given the absence of any recent hiring activity, referrals of applicants to the McVino Construction Company would clearly be inappropriate at this time.

If, after referring our unemployed welders to currently available or potentially available job openings in local establishments in the above two targetted industries, several continue to remain unemployed, we should continue down our list of local targetted industries and review the number and names of establishments appearing under SIC 371, the motor vehicles and equipment industry. Efforts should be made to determine the existing hiring situation for welders in this set of firms, and appropriate referrals should be made whenever they appear to be warranted and desired by the employer.

Effective use of the Job Guides by themselves is not a panacea for the myriad of problems faced by job development and placement staff in human resource agencies. Strict limits on the number of available job opportunities in a local economy will adversely effect the job placement performance of human resource programs, regardless of the efficiency and effectiveness of job development and placement staff. Substantial deficiencies in basic academic skills and the absence of marketable vocational skills among the clients of human resource programs will also place constraints on the placement performance of job development staff in such agencies. The availability of timely and reliable information on the structure of the job market in our local economies, employment trends in different segments of the labor market, the names and locations of firms within these segments, the individuals responsible for hiring decisions, and the specific hiring policies and practices of these firms can contribute in a substantive manner to the placement performance of our human resource programs. Strengthening the employability potential of the unemployed, the underemployed, and the economically disadvantaged will be of limited effectiveness in the absence of an ability to move them into existing jobs in the private and public sectors of our economies. The brokering function played by job development staff is frequently critical to the ability of such programs to generate lasting economic impacts for participants in human resource programs. The Job Guides are intended to contribute to the attainment of such goals for the human resource system of the Commonwealth.
